CROWDS SAW PARADE.

Streets Were Jammed While the Republican Procession Passed.

Multitudes such as seldom gather on the streets of Honolulu saw the great Republican torch light parade Saturday evening. It was a sight that must have stirred the pulses of the most blase individual in all the world. Heralded by red fire that shot tongues of ruddy light far into the sky, it passed through treets crowded and packed dozens deep at every corner, giving the parade scarce room to move on its way. It was an enthusiastic crowd, not disposed to cavil at anything but to shout and laugh and enjoy it all whole heartedly. It gathered at every turning cheering enthusiastically for the Republican nominees on the National ticket and for the passing organizations. It cheered Captain Berger and his band boys playing so merrily at the van, and the marching clubs were each greeted with salvos of applause and cheers that made them step yet more proudly along. And when the parade had passed one point, and the following red fire wagon was gone by, there was a stampede of the thousands, a rushing and a hurrying and a scurrying for places of vantage and some other fav-

The parade, too was all that could have been asked. There may have been longer parades in Honolulu hitherto, and parades upon which more money had been lavished, but there has certainly been none so wholly satisfactory from a scenic point of view. For once Honolulu's narrow, tree-arched streets served a purpose, for they furnished a setting for the scene which could scarce have been improved. The spouting flames from the fire wagon at the head of the parade danced among the boughs of the overhanging trees, and spread a rosy radiance far heavenwards, making the scene unreal, and like a glimpse of a fairy spectacle upon some vast stage, the crowds, half seen through the glare, seeming the envious gnomes, looking on at the fairy celebration. The myriad dancing lights of the torches, borne in orderly fashion by a phalanx of smartly marching men, and others in the hands of the various clubs and carried by delighted and shouting mobs of future Republicans, made the streets seem a stream of living fire, tossing and leaping with the ardency of its burning. Following the fire wagon at the head were the wheelmen, each with his bleycle gaily decorated with colored lights. One tandem was covered from handle bars to rear forks with acetylene gas lamps and its brilliancy was almost unbearable pear at hand, while from a distance it seemed a fiery dragon spouting light in all directions. Then came the grand marshal, W. H. Hoogs and his aides, Captain Fox of the mounted police and a marching squad of officers and then the Hawaiian band, with Captain Berger marching proudly at and keeping excellent time was the Republican club of Company F, N. G. H., clad in duck trousers with blue muslin sashes and red neckties, and red blouses and white trousers. The MAYY CONTRACTORS tain Wilcox, with his company of first speaker said:
